EVERGREENS

In transplanting, Evergreen trees are taken up with a ball of soil on the roots, which is securely covered with burlap. In planting, dig a hole where tree is to stand, place tree in hole just as received from the nursery, cut the string that holds the burlap in place and, if soil is unbroken, lift tree gently and remove all burlap. If soil is broken and likely to fall away from the roots, do not attempt to remove the burlap, but lay it out smooth underneath the tree. Fill in carefully with fine moist soil, which should be made firm enough by tramping to prevent roots being moved by the tree swaying in the wind.

The price of Evergreens is governed by color and form as well as size. It is only natural that selected specimens should be worth more than the average nursery run—hence the sliding scale of prices. All trees balled and burlapped.
